Addiction Summit Happening August 11

Addiction – it’s affecting our community at every level – business, education, government, law enforcement, health care, families, children. Our state is among the hardest hit by the opioid epidemic, and also by heroin, meth, and the myriad of other drugs. What can be done?

A group of over 30 local business leaders, educators, social workers, attorneys, counselors and other concerned citizens have united to open up a major public discussion about these issues, presenting real and documented facts and offering real solutions.

Join the Addiction Summit discussion on Saturday, August 11, from 9 a.m. until 1 p.m. at First Presbyterian Church. Keynoting the forum will be Dr. Vance Shaw, Fellow of the American Society of Addiction Medicine and faculty member at ETSU, who will describe the neurology/biology of addiction as a medical problem, not a simple behavior problem. Following him on the panel will be representatives of business, the county health department and public school system describing addiction’s impact from their perspectives, plus speakers from law enforcement and the world of the addicted. But solutions are possible – representatives from local and state agencies will describe specific programs offering successful recovery options.

Please mark your calendars to be on hand on August 11 to learn the facts about the addiction epidemic, and what YOU can do to intervene.

State Senator Steve Southerland, R-Morristown, along with State Rep. Tilman Goins, R-Morristown and State Rep. David Hawk, R-Greeneville, presented TCAT Morristown this week with a copy of a State Resolution honoring the school for being the pioneer of the Work Ethic Diploma. The Resolution was passed by the Tennessee General Assembly this year, honoring and commending the Work Ethic Diploma as well as TCAT’s Chris Edmonds. There are a total of 40 industries that now recognize the diploma.
